Preface

The present study was undertaken by the author as a researcher at the Department of commerce, Burdwan university during 1969-72 for the D. Phil degree in Commerce,

The main object of the study is to inquire into the meaning and concept of labour welfare in the developing economy of India which is a welfare state. The specific exploration has been made to identify the behavioural concept of labour welfare, the significance of state's role in welfare and its manifestation since 1947. It is to be noted that the present study is not an account of welfare work in India as a part of Indian economics. While carrying on the investigation main emphasis has been laid on conceptual aspects of labour investigation main emphasis has been laid on conceptual aspects of labor welfare as conjoint of economic welfare and social welfare, notwithstanding conceptual emphasis empirical evidence of the study has been incorporated in two important case studies which constitute the basic parameter of the subject matter. The case studies are based on the data collected from field survey by the author.

Stemming from the main stalk of thought an attempt has also been made to test the basic hypothesis that the concept of labour welfare is largely the manifestation of social welfare function; in the context of the prevailing pattern of trade unionism in the country. The dissertation has been postulated to ascertain the extent of conceptual relationship between welfare, productivity and motivation from the viewpoint of personnel management. This is likely to reveal the contemporary thinking on managerial aspects of labour welfare, which is, by far, the greatest stake for managements.

The present inquiry has been designed not only to analyses the conceptual implications of labour welfare but also to reveal the attitude and the perception of workers vis-a-vis welfare as experienced by them at plant level. As already noted, this micro level assessment of welfare has been instituted by case studies, besides the workers and other employees, a few well-known.

Business executives. Labour experts and government officials have been inter viewed by the author to assess the managements attitude and their evaluation of labour welfare in the country. For this purpose, the author has visited important industrial centers in order to obtain the relevant information from different cross sections of the managerial groups.

In the ultimate analysis, the future prospect of labour welfare and some policy conclusions thereof have finally wemerged in the last chapter. These are likely to establish important social implications of welfare both as a concept and precept in the perspective of future process of industrialization in India.

A select bibliography has been incorporated at the end which will indicate the contemporary literature on the subject which has moulded the author's thought pattern both directly and indirectly while carrying on the research work at the Burdwan University.

The author is deeply greatefull to Dr. D.S Ganguly, Professor and the Head of the Department of commerce, Burdwan University for his encouragement and active interest in the research work. The author is also greatly indebted to Dr. R.N Banjerjee, Who has most Assiduously supervised the work at every stage without which the thesis could not be completed within so short a period. Sincere thanks are also due to numerous other specialists in the subject, different authorities of important libraries both Indian and foreign, and finally to these employees of two important mills who have extended their most ungrudging cooperation and help for the completion of the thesis in all important respects.

Forward

Our beloved father, Dr. I P Poddar was born into a Marwari Business Family at a time when paramount importance was given to business instead of studies. Success was then measured in our community by the yardstick of one's material possessions instead of intellectual and educational achievements. Coming from this background, he took the challenge to pursue academic research by the side of his routine business activities with equal vigour. His subject of research was social welfare in the Indian Economy within Industry itself to which he belonged at that point of time.

He served as a distinguished member of Development Council in Department of Textiles, Government of India along with being Member of the Central Board of Trustees, Employees Provident Fund and Government of India for more than ten years. Being an ardent supporter of labour welfare he believed in the theory of Socialistic pattern of egalitarian society to which our country also belonged. He was associated with and served on leading industry/associations such as All India Manufacturer Organization (AIMO), The Synthetic & Art Silk Mills' Research Association (Sasmira), Federation of Indian Art Silk Weaving Industry (FIASWI), Silk and Art Silk Mill Owners' Association (SASMA), Indian Chamber of Commerce (ICC) etc. where he was fondly called Doctor Saheb.

The thesis 'Labour Welfare in a Developing Economy' was a revelation on the condition of labour welfare at the time and provided much insight and a roadmap for undertaking further development programmes by various stakeholders of society. He aspired to co-create an Industry that was built on humanitarian values while providing for welfare and inclusive development of society. We hope that his research will be thought provoking and help us understand the long way that Labour Welfare has moved from in the last 4-5 decades. We thank all the concerned persons who lend support & guidance to our father in his this endeavour. Thanks are also due to his family including my mother Shanta Devi Poddar, my sister Savita Almal & my younger brother Pradip Poddar for associating with him in compilation and clerical works of his research papers during those yester day's of which we all have fond memories.
